FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL.

SUNDAY, July 19, 1863. The money market was for a time disturbed last week by the riots, which unsettled confidence and led to some withdrawars of country funds. But by Friday capitalists had become convinced, in the first place, that the rioters would be put down, and, secondly, that in any event money was just as safe if represented by dividend paying stocks as in any other shape, and the supply to the brokers increased accordingly. Yesterday call loans were quoted 5 a 6 per cent, with rather more lenders at these rates than borrowers. Debt certificates have been working up lately, and bid fair, if the supply on the market is not increased too rapidly, to approach par again. Commercial paper is very scarce; the best names sell at 5 a 6 per cent. It is generally believed in Wall street that the money market will continue easy throughout the summer whether any fresh issues of currency are made or not. In many quarters, however, a further issue of legal tender, bearing interest, is regarded as morally certain before the 1st of September. We have no reliable information on the point.

Gold fell off again last week. The closing price yesterday was 1231/2 a 3/4, and for bankers' sterling bills 136 a 137. That gold should decline on the official announcement of the fall of Vicksburg and Port Hudson, the probable fall of Charleston, and the retreat of Bragg, was what every one expected. But people in Exchange place were a good deal surprised that it did not advance on the riots in this city. Even at the most critical period of those riots it was difficult to sell $100,000 of gold without breaking down the market. The anomaly is explained by some on the theory that people were afraid of possessing gold lest it should be taken by the mob; and at one moment bills were so much firmer than gold that this notion seemed to have some basis. But the great governing cause of the weakness of gold was, after all, a general confidence that the authorities would in a day or two suppress the disturbance, and that nothing beyond a few cases of arson, robbery and murder would result from its occurrence. In this, as in so many cases during this war, the European houses were completely at fault. Taught by their own experience to dread a mob as the greatest of dangers, they were free buyers of gold at and slightly below 130, and were entirely mystified to see it decline to 127 on the very day when the rioters seemed to enjoy full control of the city. Now that the United States forces have regained possession of the Mississippi valley, and that the armies of Grant and Banks are left free to operate elsewhere, it is not unreasonable to expect that some considerable supplies of cotton and sugar will begin to come to market. It is understood that a fresh expedition will now be undertaken into the Teche country, in which there is a great deal of Southern produce; and, on the other hand, it may fairly be presumed that General Grant will lose no time in opening up portions of Mississippi and Alabama where many hundred thousand bales of cotton are known to be hidden. Commercial agents, who have accompanied the army, report that, as a general rule, the planters are willing enough to sell their produce, provided they can be guaranteed against the vengeance of the rebel guerillas. There is of course but little prospect of commercial movements on the Mississippi at present. Bandits, armed with rifles and light artillery, infest the banks of the river from can safely sail up or down without convoy. The following table shows the course of the stock

The stock market last week was inactive but very strong. Towards the close of the week there was an increase of outside business, and indica tions of fresh activity were apparent. The public and Wall street operators appear to have satisfied themselves that the opening of the Mississippi and the probable suppression of the rebellion are not events calculated to injure the business of our great Northern railways, but, on the contrary, that great Northern railways, but, on the contrary, that contrary that the contrary of the contrary that course of the contrary that contrary the course of the contrary that course of the contrary t themselves that the opening of the Mississippi impetus to our internal trade at least as powerful as that which was imparted by the war. It appears to be the general opinion of railway men that the trade of the Mississippi river has received a blow which it will take years to cure. Even after the restoration of peace it will take some time to rebuild the boats which have been destroyed or taken into government service, and for several years it is probable that the rate of insurance for transient merchandise on the river will rule higher than it did before the war. Meanthe cities on the Upper Mississipp and its tributaries are becoming used to sending their produce East and receiving their supplies by sail. They are served quicker in this way than they were when New Orleans was their chief mart; and they save enough in interest and insurance to pay the difference in freight. There will always be an immense interchange of southern for Northern produce by way of the Mississippi river; but a targe proportion of the river trade which existed before the war has passed forever into the hands of the Northern rail-

The chief excitement last week on the Stock Exchange was in Pacific Mail, which rose about 60 per cent, selling in the street on Thursday at 253. No special cause has been assigned for this prodigious advance. A stock dividend is talked of; out nothing is known on the subject. The shorts have again suffered very severely. Harlem has also become active, rising to 112. No further action has been taken by the Common Council, the riets having probably absorbed their attention Erie is strong and in general demand. The dividend of 31/4 per cent appears to give general satisfaction, though many stockholders appear to have expected more. As we understand, the object of the directors was to secure themselves against any accidental falling off in their traffic, and to render it certain that dividends will be regularly paid hereafter. Eric common may now be considered a regular seven per cent dividend paying stock; and, as the Central pays no more, it is difficult to understand the difference in the price of the two securities. Southern old is again attracting some attention, on a rumor that a fall dividend will be paid. We learn nothing authentic on the subject. Illinois Central rose steadily last week; some considerable parcels are said to have gone abroad lately. The President's reports are giving great satisfaction in London. Pittsburg sold as high as 98 last week, on an understanding that a dividend would not be delayed beyond the let September. We are led to expect that it will not be paid before the 1st October; but it ought then to be five per cent. There is no sign of any "break down" in Hudson River. The stock fluctuates from day to day, sometimes up and sometimes down; but nothing in the movement justifes the wide difference between the cash price and the price on sellers'
